The Ultimate NYC Super Bowl Guide

Even though the Jets and the Giants weren't in contention this season, Big Apple dwellers can still get amped up for Super Bowl 48, which is being played out at MetLife Stadium in the Meadowlands - no matter how cold it gets. The whole Tri-State area will be full of visitors geared up for the game, and the city's culinary scene will be ready with pop-up restaurants, game-day parties and takeout deals galore. Whichever team you're rooting for, you'll find some selections that you can cheer about.

Non-Sports Bars Showing the Game

If you want to venture out of your house but don't feel like dealing with a bunch of rowdy fans, there are plenty of normal bars that will show the game. Among the most high-end is Jimmy, the chic rooftop lounge in the James Hotel which has debuted a new menu featuring mini grilled cheeses and Kobe franks in a blanket. Another penthouse hosting a game-day party is Chelsea's Rare Bar and Grill - this enclosed rooftop is offering personal butlers for large parties as a bonus.

Pony Bar in Hell's Kitchen will hook you up with craft beers as you watch the game and Brooklyn Winery is your go to spot for vino, walk ins are accepted there, but if you want to make sure you get a seat you can reserve a table for your crew for $250. The price includes a spread of food and some beer and wine, book it here.
